ARTHUR ADAMS

To the Members of the Class of 1899:

I respectfully submit to you the first report of the Class, covering the period from the time we entered College to date. I have delayed publishing it until now in order to give as complete a record as possible of the Class, in the Graduate schools up to the time of our triennial reunion.

I am sorry that I have been unable to do this work alone, but with the present size of the classes and the incompleteness of the records, more time is required to compile an accurate Report than any man with anything else to do can possibly give to it. I have had the assistance of one of our Classmates, who has done most of the work under my supervision, and done it, I think, extremely carefully, conscientiously, and satisfactorily. I hope the accuracy of the Report will justify the extra expense.

I am sorry, too, that so many failed to return the "Class Lives." This report would have been much more valuable had I been able to hear from all the men.

I wish to acknowledge with thanks the assistance I have had from the various club secretaries, captains of teams, the officials of the College Office, Library, and Harvard Athletic Association Office, and from many members of the Class and other Harvard men, who have answered my questions promptly and cheerfully, and given me valuable aid.

I thank also the members of the Class who answer promptly my various circulars. It is only by the hearty co-operation of every member of the Class, in attending to this and in sending the Secretary at all times news of himself and other '99 men, that we can possibly hold together a class as large as '99, which up to date has more A.B. and S.B. degree holders than any other class which ever graduated from Harvard. I hope the unusual Class spirit and enthusiasm which '99 has shown in matters of all kinds ever since we first entered College, will be kept up in this case.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR ADAMS, Secretary.

BACCALAUREATE SERMON

(IN PART)

JUNE 18, 1899

ISAIAH xxxii. 2: "A man shall be a hiding place from the wind and a covert from the tempest, as rivers of water in a dry place, and as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

As you reach the end of your college course, the question comes, what does it all amount to? The question has, indeed, come to you many times before, but it did not demand an immediate answer. The university is a little world in itself, and has its own standards by which your attainments have been measured, but now you are to be measured by another standard, — the standard of the working, every-day world, — what are you worth? It is as if you had come to a frontier beyond which the especial coins which you had used do not pass current. What is the rate of exchange? How much is your capital to shrink? At such a time, a young man asks himself, "How far have I been fitted for the work which I must do? Or maybe that I have been unfitted?" . . .

Let us frankly admit that it is possible that a man may be unfitted by his education for the place which otherwise might have been open for him. Mrs. Browning describes one who

> Had been unmade from a common man
> And not made over into an uncommon man.

The world has a great many places for the common man, and the uncommon man can readily make a place for himself, but alas for the man who has been unmade and not made over. Alas for the man whose tastes have been refined, while his will has not been strengthened, who has learned to criticise others, but has not learned to create anything for himself.

Every institution has its failures. The Church, aiming to produce a manly piety, often falls short, and the result is a weak pietism. So the university has its failures; aiming to a sound and generous education, it is often disappointed in those who have the form of culture without the power of it.

The type of the dilettante is well defined. For such men the working world has no place. They come out of college only to swell the ranks of what a distinguished Boston clergyman has recently termed "the intellectual proletariate." They are part of the mighty army of the unfit, who believe that the world owes them a living, and who are unwilling to do any of the work that the world needs and is willing to pay for.

What are the qualities that the working world steadily demands? What are its requirements? They are simple, even commonplace. They are the qualities that inhere in the conception of manliness. In estimating mechanical force, we measure it by so many horse-power. In all sorts of social service the unit is the man-power — the kind of power that inheres in human personality. Wherever we can find a cheap and effective substitute for man-power we use it, and the man is thrown out of his occupation.

In like manner certain forms of intellectual preëminence have been destroyed by books. Once the prodigy of memory, the man of encyclopædic information, was highly valued. Now that kind of man, that is only a cold storage for miscellaneous facts, is not so highly esteemed. It is much cheaper to buy our encyclopædia or dictionary than to burden one's memory with all they contain.

But there are certain powers that are exclusively human; no substitute can be invented. There is a certain work which must be done, and you must find a man to do it. You choose land with a most fertile soil, you buy the best agricultural instruments, but the farm is a failure without the right kind of a farmer. All the capital in a railroad goes to ruin if you cannot find men of fidelity and skill to carry on the work.

We go farther, and say that not only is it necessary to have human power, but that the kind of power necessary to any worthy achievement is moral power; that is, after all, the power that guides, that rules. The world can get along with very few preëminently clever men, but it cannot get along without a great many good men. The rarer qualities, even when they rise to the heights of genius, are not serviceable unless they get on a foundation of commonplace, every-day virtue.

The highest praise we can give to any one is to call him a great man. The significance of this is that it is a quantitative, and not a qualitative adjective. A great man is not one who has qualities or powers not possessed by others; he has the same powers, only in fuller measure. The great general or the great statesman is great in saving common sense. And the real effect of education is felt only when it is accepted, not as a substitute for any of the common every-day virtues, but as the enlargement of their scope. There are no substitutes for common sense, patience, integrity, and courage. There is no substitute for a stalwart conscience or for a manly enthusiasm. Refinement does not take the place of sturdy, self-reliant industry.

But it is possible to transform a narrow and intolerant virtue into one that is broad and intelligent. Conscience must always rule. It is like the great powers in Africa: There is a limited domain within which its rule is complete; beyond that is a more or less vague sphere of influence, and still beyond is the dark continent of conduct that is left to itself. It is the function of education to enlarge the sphere of influence of the human conscience.

We have a right to demand of the educated man that he shall bring to the discussion of the larger and more complex questions of modern civilization a mind so disciplined as to bring order out of chaos. In the government of a city or village, the essential thing is personal integrity: but he who would govern honestly and successfully the great city must have a breadth of sympathy, a quickness of appreciation, a wealth of experience, adequate to the more difficult task he has undertaken. Modern life makes larger demand upon the individual; this means the necessity of more strenuous training; but remember that the training is nothing more than the bringing to the fullest perfection the manly qualities of truthfulness, courage, steadfastness, and loyalty.

BACCALAUREATE HYMN

Music — "Duke Street."

By Sherman Campbell

To thee, O God, whose guiding eye
Our fathers led across the sea,
A home to find on these bleak shores,
Where they might freely worship thee.

To thee, O God, whose thought inspired
Our fathers in that wilderness
To leave their sons this heritage,
That all might feel its deep impress.

To thee, O God, whose mighty arm
Encircled it with power divine,
We bow before thy gracious throne,
Devoutly in thy praises join.

God of our fathers, bow thine ear,
And listen to our humble prayer,
Direct us with thy watchful eye,
Protect us with thy constant care.

God of our fathers, hear us still
Amid the world's vain battle-strife;
We 'll trust in thine almighty power
To lead and guard our daily life.

CLASS DAY EXERCISES

JUNE 23, 1899

CLASS ORATION

By William Henry Conroy

Mr. Marshal, Ladies, and Gentlemen, Men of 'Ninety-nine:

The history of Harvard has been one of evolution and progress. To-day this great University is working out reforms, the seeds of which were sown twenty or thirty years ago, and with the development of the American citizen, and the uplifting of American life, always in view, the constant endeavor has been to strengthen the foundations of knowledge, so that the men who are to be the constructive and restraining force in the country, may be better fitted to contend with the ever arising problems of citizenship.

President Eliot, mindful of the greater end, "has gone up and down the whole length of our educational line, condemning every defect, denouncing every abuse, exposing every sham, rebuking every form of incompetence and inefficiency as treason to the truth, an injury to the community, a crime against the individual." So Harvard has grown and changed, ever striving to meet the present needs of education, until to-day the University man represents the highest type of citizen, and the motive power behind the government.

It has finally become our province still further to emphasize the truth of Harvard's training, to prove that as the complexities of our national life become greater, there are intelligent men capable and ready for the emergency. So the Harvard we knew, and under whose protecting shade we have lived for four years, to-day has passed from us. Now it becomes our lot to meet the larger excitements, to find somewhere, somehow, in the world outside, our place and duty. To-day, then, we may look back over the way we have come, and contemplate the possibilities of what is to be. We are too prejudiced, and not sufficiently removed to have any distinct perspective of the near past. Yet we know vaguely, that we have profited by an intellectual tradition, which is independent of particular teachers, which has guided us in our choice of things, and duly interpreted for us those which we have chosen. We apprehend the great outlines of knowledge, the principles on which it rests, the scale of its parts, its lights and its shades, its great points and its little, as we otherwise could not have apprehended them. Hence, it is, we are said to be "liberally educated." A habit of mind has been formed which will last through life, of which the attributes are freedom, equitableness, calmness, moderation and wisdom. We have come to a sense of security and confidence. We do not know just what we are to expect, but we know there is a right standpoint, a right way of looking at things, and that has been our greatest inheritance.

Among the other reform tendencies that are making their way in Harvard to-day, is that which aims to reduce the requirements for the degree that shall finally make the college course three instead of four years. It is one of the results of the development of specialization, and the importance of professional study. It may or may not mean a lowering of our educational standard, and that Harvard must take a secondary place, where before she led American scholarships, but it does suggest the question, What is it that best typifies the Harvard man? Nine people out of ten conclude that a man comes here to accumulate a mass of facts, and if they find that he has not the wisdom of the ancients and the fairy tales of science at his ready command, they are disappointed. Some few men may have developed along those lines, but we know that it is the courage and ability to think for ourselves that has been the greatest gain of the last four years. The gain is one of personality, that has come from four years' constant association with a very great variety of men. We entered this college world, five hundred or more of us, representing almost every class in the community, every State, a great variety of teachings, with different ideals and five hundred different outfits of personal temperaments. Each had some purpose. There were fellows eager after knowledge for learning's sake; fellows who coveted it, because knowledge is power; fellows who were anxious to learn as much as possible, because a smattering of knowledge is elegant; fellows who came because they were sent. There were strong and weak examples; fellows more or less matured, and those who were very young. There were moral characters and some with a tendency towards unwholesome experiment. There were those for whom the serious business life had begun, and others who came to play. Here we all met, and came under the influences of the place. We knew that we had a position in the University, for we were catalogued as 'Ninety-Nine. Well, it is easy enough to fall in with the routine of college life, and for four years we have studied, or played, or loafed. To different men came different opportunities, for in Harvard one is very much the creature of circumstance. In time we realized we were playing a part in a miniature world, and things took on a more definite shape. We strove for objects very much as men strive for prizes in every-day life. A feeling of proprietary interest in the University finally came to us, and we knew that Harvard's honor was our honor. Daily, we rubbed elbows with new acquaintances, and began to know men. Over college pipes, or from the embers of the college fire we talked about letters, and life and people, the immediate environment, and "the greater world, on the brink of which the college man stands." So we grew to know each other, to learn the other man's point of view and to profit.

That was our privilege; to many men it has had a varying value. Some, more than others, see in the four years behind them stimulating and helpful experiences, and for them college has been a sound training school for life. Altogether, we have come to our senior estate by different ways. The poor student has found here opportunities that his richer classmate never understood, and the latter, by reason of his enlarged field of choice, has had the advantage of possibilities. Some by superiority on the athletic field have won a distinct place in the class. Others following up the literary side have seen another phase of college life.

But for what do we value a man this senior year, this final analysis? Not for his prizes and rewards. Some may have won the highest distinction obtainable and be little honored, according as he is viewed from the vantage ground of true or false success. We do not honor a man for what he has gotten, but what he is. The public opinion of the class ranks its members, not according to their acquisitions, but their worth. We grant a distinct superiority to manhood, and a society is formed above the societies.

We have not all been equally well known to each other, because our numbers, and the peculiar social organization of the college, has prevented that. By luck or choice we have gone along with this or that little group of men, but we must all have realized that an ever strong and healthy spirit united all the parts, and that has characterized the class in everything it has undertaken.

We are about to say farewell to the college we love and have known during four years; not a pleasant thought, though alleviated by a natural desire for a larger view of things. We become now the bearers of a particular trust. The college has given us high ideals; we have been dreaming splendid dreams and seeing noble visions. We are responsible to them. As public spirit finds a home in the college, so the college man must prove in his public service the greatness of his purposes.

In the every-day business of society, questions of politics and government are constantly coming up for solution. One of the duties set upon us by our training is public benefaction, and it is for us to interpret and solve the puzzles. We are expected to do the best that in us lies, for there are traditions which the college-bred man must not fall short of. Whenever there has been a crisis of national moment Harvard men have been found to take their share of work. It may have been a social or economic problem, or it may be where the national honor and flag are involved. We ourselves have been very near the last.

A word has been passed on the Harvard men who went to the war last spring, by one who should have taken a part in the class-day exercises of '98, except that he was with his regiment in the south.*

"As it was in '61, so in the early spring of '98, in fewer numbers perhaps, because the need was less, but with just as strong spirit as before, the men of Harvard University enlisted in the forming regiments for the front. Men we had known, and men we had heard of, were placed in command of companies, or in the third relief of the guard, were doing what ought to be done. There are no battles now. The men have returned and we see them about college as before, but of course not all who went in the spring: for the work they had to do would not permit of that. And to those whom we shall not see either this year or the next, who fought as their teaching had told them, and did it well, to them full honor is owing, and to them is given in sadness the great love of this University of Harvard. They died in service and when they were buried United States troops stood at attention." This was a duty, well performed, and a page in college history we shall all like to remember.

Occasion for just such heroic action remains, perhaps not so apparent, but as needful, and whenever there is the call for courage, you must remember that it is the "college man's faith to dare." Whatever your chosen field, remember there is a standard by which all right action is judged, for the men who have been here before us have set the example of fidelity to trust, and wherever you may be, writing sermons or briefs, striking claims in the West or planting in Brazil, at the club, or on the ranch or railroad, or following our armies in the East, remember you are Harvard men, and be mindful of the sermon that the University shield teaches.

CLASS POEM

By John Albert Macy

The kinder courtesy of Fate
Has made us for a little day
Good comrades, who as mate to mate
Shake hands and call a halt to play.

Some merry comedies have spun
Their winding plots to foolish ends,
And strangers who have watched the fun
Have laughed together, and been friends.

Sometimes we had a blow to deal —
Our fists were clenched, but, ere they shot,
Have touched perchance. The touch we feel,
Long since the blow has been forgot.

Sometimes there was a song to sing;
The man beside you set the tune,
A youthful, half discordant thing,
Yet somehow ended all too soon.

You caught the look of one who sang
In chorus, and you wondered why
His voice was good, until there sprang
The glow of kinship to his eye.

The petty fights for petty rights,
Crossed with the tinge of sacrifice —
Small triumphs won on humble heights
Well got because we paid the price —

These are the things of which we made
Our faltering games of chance with Truth,
Content to lose, so we but played
An honest game, the game of youth.

Some few of us have wove a net
Of formulae, wherewith to snare
The unknown world we have not met,
Yet trust, if caught, will serve us fair.

And those of us who cannot read
Big futures where they are not clear,
Know well that all the tools we need
Lie ready when the task is near.

Our best reward, our best excuse,
The joy or crime of being young,
Must answer how we've put to use
The motley things we've lived among.

Though we have squandered what was dear,
Though useless goals have cost us much,
God bless the chance that threw us here,
The luck that made our shoulders touch.

IVY ORATION

By John Francis Brice

Mr. Marshal, Classmates, Friends:

We are assembled here this morning upon a most solemn business. There is a deep mystery over the Ivy Oration that none but the speaker himself can dispel. And it is of course the Ivy Oration that brings us together this morning; the other ceremonials are merely incidental. We are really here — I would speak this with all due caution and deference to the History Department — we are really here this morning to celebrate the planting of the Ivy. You did not know that. It is what we call the Ivy Mystery.

Let us first render honor where it is due. In the year 1372, before Cambridge went no-license, it became the custom for the Senior Class to assemble in caps and gowns on the day of the Baccalaureate Sermon, around the Yard Pump. In this same year the pretty ceremony was introduced of sending every girl at Class Day a florist's bill which she was to tear up into small sizes and throw peevishly at the John Harvard Statue. About this time a piece of Ivy was found, which nobody wanted; and it was therefore planted in Boston Common. The vine was allowed to wander at its own sweet-william, and streets were laid out spasmodically in its wake. At first it was considered ornamental, and was named the Liberty Tree; possibly because it took the liberty of stopping trolley cars and putting out the lights on the New York World Building at the top of Beacon Hill; later it became a nuisance and was called other names, which I will not repeat. It was decided to send an orator to dissuade the Ivy from further misbehavior; and a man was appointed named Smith — I think it was Smith; but one can never be sure about those Russian names. By the time the ornamental water-front called Beacon Alley was completed, the Ivy had entirely disappeared, although it is rumored that there are still people named Smith arguing in various parts of the country. The custom of having an Ivy Orator was, however, by this time, firmly established. So that a custom to go with the Oration had to be invented. For some time the opinion prevailed that, the Ivy being no longer available, the next best thing to plant would be the Ivy Orator. Fortunately, this superstition has died out. The victim is nowadays allowed to bury his Oration instead. In due course of civilization we may expect to see future efforts buried with all necessary circumstance at the beginning of the Confetti Exercises before they are read to the public.

It is usual on this occasion to let the audience take home a few serious ideas, in a box; and in common with Mr. Conroy, the Boy Orator of the platform, I had decided to speak on the proposed change in the length of the college course. We were, however, unable to agree on a common ground of argument, as my comic friend insisted that the faculty contemplates shortening the course to three years, when every undergraduate knows the faculty is trying to lengthen his course to five or even six years. We gave up our joint debate, therefore, and proceeded along separate lines. But it will be noticed that the other speaker, with black infidelity, has anticipated my subject, and even the vein in which it was to be treated. I have been compelled at the last minute to rewrite my speech, carefully cutting out all the jokes which Mr. Conroy has used in his. I may remark, in this connection, that I had intended to appear to-day in some bizarre and startling costume; but I find, on examining the records, that cap and gown — significant of the bachelor's degree — are quite as bizarre and startling for Ivy Orator as anything he could wear.

Pythagoras once remarked — or may be it was Tecumseh, or Dickens; I am a little uncertain on names — that the ivy green is a dainty plant that creepeth o'er ruins old. Just why it should creep over 'Ninety-Nine under the circumstances, is a question only to be answered satisfactorily from the point of view probably held by yonder schoolboy; to whom indeed a Senior in cap and gown is a ruin infinitely old, and therefore worthy of some reverence. The present speaker is inclined to regard Seniors generically as the youngest class of men he has ever met; why, they are positively kittenish. Who is such a middle-aged prig as a Freshman? Who so consciously condescending as a Sophomore? As for your careless Junior, he is a man of the world — beginning to blasé; not, however, too blasé to embezzle the Senior's best girl on Class Day with all the grace and deviltry of a villain on the stage. Some men are born dignified, and these never get over it; others achieve dignity, and — well, they rarely get entirely over it, either; but your Senior has dignity thrust upon him, and if it takes the form of a cap and gown it is very hot and uncomfortable. "Backward, turn backward, oh, Time, in your flight; Make me a Freshman again for to-night," as Mr. Macy has so aptly said in his poem. That is the sentiment of every Senior to-day. You will therefore pardon me if I revert reminiscently to the early triumphs of our college course.

Do you remember, oh, classmates, our group photograph of Freshman year? Ah, but we were a solemn lot! We scarce could stoop to whistle, "There she goes, on her toes, all dressed up in her Sunday clothes," at passing goodies. But our Senior group — how different: we were so docile that Mr. Tupper ventured to tell us jokes and fairy stories. After winning everything in sight, athletically, we stopped being Freshmen, and repeated the performance as Sophomores. Since then, the rest of the University has followed our example and teaching so closely, that this year we can hang our oars up in our rooms, and let other classes do the rowing.

The Weld began with our class, of course, like everything admirable. Or if it did not begin, it should have begun with us (English Department please notice). It had, as a matter of fact, been going for about thirty years, in preparation for the arrival of 'Ninety-Nine. The Raffle and Revelfor Club, encouraged by our Rough Rider contingent, stepped into the breaches left by the lapse of the Harvard Triflers. We all took Fine Arts in our Sophomore year, so as to be able to appreciate the Touraine Café when the opportunity offered. It is a fact to be regretted, that when the new Reynold's Café was built, Professor Norton found the strain too great, and retired. These were also the days of Geology excursions, when we posed on the apex of a rocky hill, taking notes in the rain, until the instructor remarked, pointing with a lank forefinger, "You see that drumlin over forenenst the swamp? And that chalk cliff three miles beyond? If you will look closely, you will observe a trail of smoke on the horizon. That is our train, gentlemen. We have now seventy-six seconds to catch it."

Junior year found us struggling in the English C. Some of us have n't got a bubble yet. We did, however, learn that no one should ever reason forward, — and that every man is a liar until proved otherwise. About the same time sixty-five thousand new dormitories were erected, mostly on Mt. Auburn Street. The new building for the Co-operative Society, situated between Stoughton and Holworthy, was at length completed in our Senior year, as well as the new arena, where future classes are to scrap for food. Another architectural event that must not be passed by is the completion of the Radcliffe gymnasium. This building, if we are to believe the Graduates' Magazine, contains, among other facilities, a swimming tank, with a capacity of 25,000 gals. It sounds astonishing. — But let us not pursue this line of thought.

It remains to say that our dear old rival, Yale, has so far found small satisfaction in 'Ninety-Nine. Most of us have got even with the Eli's this year, and got into their bank accounts beside. As the Crimson has so well said, the Whist Team and the Shooting Club deserve especial credit, the former for the loud and effective silence they preserved during the intervals of play, the latter for the daring manner in which they have repeatedly shot the chutes.

And now let us finish with a charitable word of warning. Look out for the Odist. You observe I have no fear of hurting his feelings, as he is from Calais, Maine. After he has read his parody on "Fair Harvard" you will file into the Yard, where an alarm of fire will be rung in. They may ring in a few speeches and some confetti, too; you can't tell. You will, however, pay no attention to the fire-engine: it will get out of your way; it is the only vehicle in Cambridge that does. Presently the whistle will blow "all out," and some one will cry "rubber!" You will get used to this: it happens every hour or so. Only if the signal 99 rings, you must pick up your goloshes and trot back to Saugus. For if '99 ever blazes up, you can hum to yourself the words of the song — "There'll be a hot time in the old town to-night."

I have been asked to make a number of announcements at the close of the service. The friends of the engaged couples may remain to offer congratulations. The congregation will now rise and sing: "There were ninety and nine."

ODE

By Henry Milnor Rideout

From the sun-filt'ring trees that have sheltered our youth,
From these red walls and quiet, we turn
Toward the stress of the future, the dust of the world,
And the patience our manhood shall learn.
Ah, not without weariness, not without pain
Shall we keep the unrest so divine,
Keep the star in our heart, and the word in our breast,
As true men, dearest Harvard, of thine.

In the council, the study, the roar of the towns,
In the turbulent, alien lands,
Our country has need of her strenuous youths
With their souls in the work of their hands.
Have we straightness of limb, have we clearness of eye,
Are our thoughts but intrepid and free,
'T is the gift of the Mother, who gives us in turn,
Dear Land, to the service of thee.

SALUTATORY

DE NATURA AMORIS PATRIAE

By Edward Franklin Alexander

Salvete omnes qui ad haec sollemnia nobiscum concelebranda has in aedes convenistis. Te primum salvere iubeo, praeses noster praestantissime qui triginta iam per annos universitatem nostram caram ad maiora semper melioraque perduxisti. Utinam multos etiam annos tuis auspiciis fruamur. Et vobis professores ac tutores quibus ducibus et difficultates studiorum nostrorum superavimus et eorum delectationes magis percepimus salutem dico. Vos quoque saluto, socii inspectoresque quorum administratione fideli florent et vigent res nostrae. Deinde te, huius civitatis princeps eximie, egregiis successor ipse egregie. Nunc vero tam gratissimum nobis quam honorificum est officium ut Gallorum e gente, artium et urbanitatis sede insignem virum, legatum Americanis acceptissimum salvere inbeamus. Quem cum salutamus, salutamus illum populum qui velut in cunabulis rei publicae nostrae erat praesidio. Salve igitur, vir praeclarissime, amice populi Americani. Ad vos venio matronae benignae vosque virgines pulcherrimae, dulce decus nostrum, salvete. Denique omnibus aliis qui adsunt salutem dico plurimam.

Nec vos minime salvere iubeo condiscipuli mei qui quattuor annis dulcibus his in locis actis iam in vitam strenuiorem profecturi estis. Saeclum novum vobis se pandit, vos sibi expectat. Proinde exite auspiciis propitiis patriae magno honori magnoque usui futuri.

Venit autem milii in mentem pauca vobis de amore patriae verba facere. Etenim proximo quidem anno dum bellum geritur inter patriam nostram aliamque civitatem multi condiscipulorum nostrorum egressi sunt ut pro patria armis pugnarent quorum nonnulli non reversi sunt. Pulcherrimum hoc exemplum! Iuvenes ingenio maximo praeditos spesque felicitatis maximas habentes ita patriae pericula atque opera sibi adiungere! Nobile quidem quacumque de causa studium tantum amoremque tam clarum habere ut ipsam vitam pro ea relinquere parati simus sed nobilissimum nobili etiam causa.

Hi igitur fortes cur arma ceperunt? Eratne quod patria in periculo esse videretur vel forte ut cresceret patria. Neutra harum causarum erat. Neque vero quia se pro iustitia pugnaturos crederent. Quidam enim eorum bellum improbabant. Quaenam ergo, si quaeratis, nisi quod ivstum eis videbatur imperio parere a civibus instituto.

Sed iterum forte rogatis cur civitati quae civium modo iudicium sustinet, parendum sit. Non sane quod de terra ipsa timemus. Nam saepe sicut in hoc bello Hispaniensi nequaquam de patriae solo pugnatur Neque vero quod cariores nobis cives nostri omnes. Hac sola de causa ita civitati nos subicimus quod omnes quasi societatis cuiusdam membra esse videmur. Itaque si praesidium a civitate postulare nobis aequum est, profecto civitas nobis quam maxime possumus adiuvanda est. Omnes, enim, oportet, ut aiunt, unicuique auxilium ferre atque quemque omnibus. Fas est ut opinor nos omnibus ubique hominibus aeque esse bene volos sed dum inter civitates complures disiuncta erit orbis terrarum, ut omnes maxime felicitate afficiantur, suam quemque oportet societatem civilem maxima opera studioque adiuvare atque si bella gerentur, quod deprecamur, non licet esse negligentes sed omnibus opibus rei publicae praesto esse debemus.

Utinam autem e his civitatibus multis inter se pugnantibus una oriatur omnium hominum societas magnifica pacem concordiamque ubique ferens. Tum vero desinerentur caedes hominum invidiaeque gentium tumque demum pro patria mente manibusque dimicantes certi conscii essemus nos pro iustitia etiam atque pro Deo dimicare.

DISQUISITIONS

THE DEGENERATION OF THE DIME NOVEL

By Robert Peabody Bellows

We are told that the dime novel, after flourishing for some forty years, is dying; that its proverbially lurid pages are no longer read with the eagerness which they once excited; that its thrilling episodes have ceased to rouse the interest of many millions of readers.

How are we to account for this decline of the dime novel? Is it due to a more cultivated and discriminating taste among the masses? Or can it even be that the "Unknown Public," concerning which a famous English author once wrote so amusingly, has gone out of existence?

It is true that there are toy shops, cheap bakeries, candy stores, and like haunts of impressionable youth, where sensational literature in large gay-colored covers is still sold. But the sales of the dime novel are year by year decreasing, and those qualities which went with it, in the days of its tropical luxuriance, are becoming less and less marked. Old Sleuth has tracked down his final villain. Deadwood Dick has followed his last trail.

In the early '60's, however, when the dime novel first came into being in this country, its sales were very large. As early as '64, five millions of dime books had been circulated by the originators of cheap literature, the famous firm of Beadle in New York. From that time on, the public bought more and more eagerly of this tempting and inexpensive fare, — that is, that portion of the public which is easily satisfied if it be but given a highly seasoned adventure, dished up in what it takes for democratic simplicity. The first edition of a certain ten-cent production called "Seth Jones" was of sixty thousand copies. Before its appearance, the enterprising publisher billed the length and breadth of the country with the query, "Who is Seth Jones?" Nobody could answer the question. So with true Yankee inquisitiveness everybody bought "Seth Jones."

For a while these flat folio-shaped stories of bravery and daring bore on their covers rudely drawn cuts of dashing cowboys and shackled Indian princesses. The tales within were, for the most part, of the adventurous and blood-curdling life of the plains. Their heroes lived and died under the open sky. When they were not hanging by a mere thread over dizzy precipices, they were being rescued (in the very nick of time!) from death-dealing Choctaws. Mounted on steeds of matchless endurance and speed, these heroes of the earlier type of dime novel galloped through the bloodiest pages of their lives with most perfect nonchalance. In fact, the restrained air with which the most thrilling achievements are recounted in the earlier dime literature, is most remarkable. For instance, in a tale that purports to describe the highly heart-rending happenings of Frosty, an old guide among the merciless Blackfeet Indians, the following is a fair example:—

"With one majestic stride, the Blackfoot fiend halted before the man who, held by a score of scarlet hands, was as helpless as a captive in irons.

"'You got me foul,' was all that our hero said, looking undauntedly into the glittering eyes of Arrow-Head.

"The hatchet which the chief had lifted fell bloodless at his side.

"'Take the white dog to the tree that stands in the moonlight and tie him there,' he said to his braves.

"The next instant six bowstrings were released from the red fingers and our hero's head dropped on his breast, as four arrows buried themselves in the seat of life."

And yet we may be sure that the unhappy victim of this atrocity does not die, despite the four arrows quivering in his heart. For the hero never dies in a rightly constituted dime novel. We meet him again and again in a hundred trying circumstances. Dime novel after dime novel is issued to recount his adventures.

As time went on, the character of the dime novel began to breathe less of the free life of the frontier and more of the closer and more criminal atmosphere of cities. The reason of this change is evident. In the '60's and early '70's the great romantic interest of this country was in the conquest of the West. But the time came when the effete East began to think of itself. Emigration to the West was no longer attended with frontier hardship, and interest in it was less keen. Not the adventures of the plains, but the struggle for wealth in crowded cities and the varied excitements that attend it, became the interest of the populace. Occasionally the Red Indian still donned his war paint, but as a rule the plots began to turn on more domestic scenes. The detective made his appearance, hot on the scent of a big diamond robbery alluringly pictured on the titlepage. The villain took to cigarettes and to an annoying habit of hissing between clenched teeth, — two practices which he has never since been able to abandon. The young woman in the black frock, uncorking a bottle marked "poison" with her teeth, became of more common occurrence.

There is something almost Elizabethan in the unaffected way in which the later dime novel devotes itself to the manners and customs of its own period. There is an artless striving after what is known as "local color." Just as Thomas Dekker was careful to state that his young gallants strolled in Cheapside or Paul's Walk, as the case might be, so the humble writer of the modern dime novel feels called upon to give an equally realistic setting to his narrative. One of this kind begins somewhat abruptly, —

"'What are you looking at so intently?'

"Harry Brady, the pupil of the celebrated Secret Service detective, Old King Brady, thus addressed his preceptor.

"Young King Harry, as Harry was usually called, had just come upon the veteran.

"The latter stood on a corner of East Thirty-eighth Street, New York City."

It is a matter of some wonderment why this dreary sort of thing has been so popular during the last forty years.

It can hardly be said with fairness that the dime novel is, as a tale, "told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." But surely no suspicion of genius can be conceived to lurk in the short choppy paragraphs of such fiction. They retell for the thousandth time old plots refurbished into seeming novelty. Even the writer of such stuff must know that there is no more lasting quality in his machine-made, weekly output than in the shape of this year's Class Day bonnets. And yet, dime novels, untrue to nature, profitless and long drawn out as they are, have given keen pleasure to vast numbers of indiscriminate readers.

Moreover, it is a satisfaction to know that whatever faults may be found with the artistic and literary equipment of the dime novel, morally it has always been above reproach. The heroine is not only beautiful, but virtuous. The villain seeks our hisses, not our admiration. And the hero, ever on the side of right and truth, however commonplace he may appear to us, always triumphs in the last chapter. Except for inciting unbalanced youths, now and then, to forsake their anxious parents and seek adventures afield, the dime novel is as harmless as the Rollo Books.

But its days seem to be numbered. Where formerly it flaunted its grim black and white covers on almost every bookstall, to-day its more gaudily lithographed exterior is only to be seen in the windows of obscure side streets.

The masses that once read such harmless chronicles as "Red Thunderbolt's Secret," or, "Denver Doll; the Detective Queen," now turn to the debasing columns of police crime and scandal in the daily papers. There they find at a lower price a substitute which is fully as sensational and far more injurious. People who would not for a moment tolerate vicious fiction read with avidity the scandals of the papers because they are set forth as facts. Realism rather than romanticism is the dominant note to-day, not only in legitimate, but in sensational literature. That portion of the daily press which is known as Yellow Journalism threatens the dime novel's very existence!

THE NATION'S INEVITABLE DUTY

By Edward Prentiss Costigan

To walk with facts is the first duty of the statesman; his second, to lead in the direction of ideals. Never have these self-evident truths stood in more urgent need of reiteration than to-day, when the shadow of our national responsibility in the Philippine Islands presses on the brain and heart of every serious American.

Facts and ideals, as in the usual case, will be found to combine for the solution of this perplexing and important problem, and, in the former regard, there are several conspicuous considerations which make plain to the thoughtful citizen that our nation has already given, beyond retreat, an ineradicable choice. Certainly it well behooves us, as sensible citizens and practical men, to make our earliest inquiry on this side, and openly and carefully to weigh that powerful combination of facts which compel the widely held conviction that the United States stands committed to the future ownership and control of the Philippine Archipelago.

Foremost in time, and perhaps significance, of the facts of the hour is, of course, the legal one. In the month of February of this year, the Senate of the United States, delegated to that representative capacity by the Federal Constitution, ratified our well-known treaty of peace and territorial cession with the Kingdom of Spain. That ratification was one of unquestionable constitutional validity, the objections taken to it, even by the senior Senator from Massachusetts, amounting in the end to a criticism only of the constitutional expediency, and not the constitutional power. It was a ratification unhesitatingly accepted in the concert of nations, and bound us to the most rigid discharge of every international obligation a nation of high rank and honor can assume. However one may like it, that is the initial fact of this discussion, and, lament who will, he who would avoid its consequences must inform us, with all explicitness, what our people can, in honor, do, but abide by that sovereignty and those international obligations voluntarily assumed by our empowered representatives. Sovereignty in international law is like property in the eye of the old common law: there must be a vested possessor somewhere, — neither is ever lost. Any international lawyer is well aware that property and sovereignty, unless subjected to transference, abide and in all reason must abide in the possessor.

And this raises what may be termed the second, or the moral fact, of the problem. While no one to-day can be found, — and to the honor of all Americans, alike, be it said, — who seriously proposes the resignation of our disagreeable task in those islands to more willing, if less friendly foreign interference, it is asked, with some show of reason, what there is to hinder the simple and natural alternative of turning over the much-regarded sovereignty to the inhabitants themselves, at the same time, if need be, guaranteeing to them, under the guise of a protectorate, immunity from the earth-hunger of any nation not disposed to abide by an unconditional abdication on our part? That is, what is there to hinder our assumption of external obligations without the control of internal rights?

The answer to such a question is, of course, the simple statement that, according to the best information we have at hand, the people in those islands are of no sufficient intelligence or civilization to warrant such a course. To offer them self-government is, therefore, to tender them present anarchy and a long future of chaotic misrule and local tyranny — and that under the protection of our flag — in place of that ultimate civilization and that final and very real self-government toward which all the political and educational and religious energies of this country will combine to direct them, if we but accept our legal conditions as binding. Where is the person in the United States to-day who has reason to doubt that the people of the Philippine Islands are unfit for self-government, and that we leave them to anarchy, the weak to misfortune, and the ignorant to unlifting mental night, if we leave them to themselves? The proofs are twofold: the conduct of the people themselves and the testimony of eye-witnesses. What can be said of the immediate fitness for self-government of a people, who, on the night of the fourth of February past, before our representatives could determine what form a friendship that had liberated them from tyranny should take, sought to annihilate our army, all kindliness for them in its heart, in its delicate position on their inhospitable shores? Of course, for a people either so ignorant or so treacherous as that, and capable of the many barbarities with which that action was accompanied and succeeded, there can be no condemnation too strong, and about such a fact, fairly stated, conviction wants nothing to be clear. What is more, an immense mass of testimony from the far East confirms that earliest impression. A sample that might be sustained with practical unanimity, from Admiral Dewey down to the commonest seaman at Manila, is that of a reliable observer now there, Mr. John Bass, who was unwillingly converted to this view. "To-day I understand," are his recent words, "that to the natives liberty means the opportunity to give unbridled license to their mad racial instincts — there is no choice method. A strong military government is the only method of dealing with this people." In a word, morality supplements legality in commanding our retention and control of the Philippine Islands.

To these facts, bearing in themselves a wellnigh resistless conviction, there are others adding strong reinforcement, which time barely permits to be indicated. There is the political fact, for instance, that it yet remains to be shown that the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, by an overwhelming majority, would not welcome our leadership of them in the paths of civilization. And it is equally as yet a subject for demonstration that Aguinaldo and his co-operators, through their leadership of one out of thirty tribes, have not seized a dictatorship and imposed it on an unwilling but intimidated multitude.

There is the economic fact, also to be reckoned with, that we live in an age peculiarly of steam and steel and of electricity, and of world production for world markets, — an age in which, as never before, the evolutionary principle in nature is visibly pointing to an ultimate peace and unity of all nations and peoples. By these means the world is as closely drawn together to-day as were the present boundaries of the American Union but three quarters of a century ago; and, attending that circumstance, is the not wholly unreasonable idea that all the sense and instinct of the races, in whose hands are these incomparable agencies of progress, demand, uncompromisingly, and in some way are bound to accomplish, that the desert places of the world shall blossom like the rose.

There is, too, for this country, the certain historical fact that colonization, of one sort or another, is, in reality, no new thing, but, indeed, the oldest of conditions, and that our people have been colonizing through the whole of our history, from the landing of the Pilgrims to the settlement of California; and that other side of the same consideration, that, if we abandon the Philippine Islands, we do not, as we should hope to do, escape the problems of colonization, for we have them presented to us already, in their full force, not only in New Mexico, the Indian Territory, and Alaska, but in Hawaii and Porto Rico, and, we may eventually discover, in Cuba itself.

And, finally, I would mention, as not the least to be considered, the sentimental fact that the soil of those islands has now been repeatedly drenched with the blood of valiant American soldiers, fighting under a flag whose presence there is sanctioned by morality and legality. In a word, our national self-respect has become involved, and it is impossible that, at this late hour, a people of our stock and principles should retire before the world, in self-confessed defeat, from this plough to which we have set our hand.

To sum up the sober considerations that have been advanced, we are committed legally, morally, politically, economically, historically, and patriotically to our task. Our sovereignty in the Philippine Islands imposes national and international obligations; morality imposes religious and educational ones; our political system requires a peaceful settlement of the problems of the administration; economic considerations and historical ones show us that the instinct of the race and the hope of an ultimately civilized world contribute to draw us on; and sentimental reasons tie us fast to their future.

If I am right, we are committed to the future control of the Philippine Islands with the full force of inevitability. From that task no nation, furnished with our ideals, will or can retreat. It is idle to seek to hinder our republican march by the assertion that the failure of republican government, in such an undertaking, is a foregone conclusion, that colonization of this sort is imperial, and that, under modern Britain as under ancient Rome, it has shamelessly disregarded individual rights and democratic principles. Take such an unbelievable statement at its worst and what does it teach? The old lessons already spoken of, that statesmanship must lead in the direction of ideals. If these things be true, our citizenship is summoned to outdo both Roman and English colonization. We are called on to undertake a colonization whose overshadowing, ever persisting, all pervading ideal is that democracy which beats in the passionate heart of our country. If these assertions be true, England has sent democracy into Canada and Australia, but she has not sent its ideals; they remain royal provinces. We shall send the ideals, the democratic ideals of education and law and self-government and morality and religion, even into the Polynesian jungles. The greatness of our race is in its ideals; if we abide by those, we can fall but not fail.

For the nation that shall succeed in this great work of regeneration — this substitution of Christian ethics for Pagan ethics, this clothing of barbarian nakedness with the garb of civilization, this deep laying of democratic law and liberty and self-government in the former seats of savage license — what praise will be adequate? When that work shall be done, where, among those whose judgments we prize, will be found one to regret that in our day it was imperatively said, though with doubt, with fear, and with prayer —

> "Onward the chariot of the Untarrying moves,
> Nor day divulges Him, nor night conceals;
> Thou hear'st the echo of unreturning hooves,
> And thunder of irrevocable wheels?"

SHADOWS

By William R. Dickinson

Shadows are the most dependent things in the world. Mortally sensitive to the sun's rays, and therefore doomed forever to skulk under the protection of some gross material body, they lead a fugitive, shadowy, most unsatisfactory existence. Some shadows, to be sure, — those of the pyramids or of the everlasting hills, for example, — enjoy a fairly quiet and endurable life; for except when some greater cloud shadow destroys their identity, they live on from age to age always sure of protection from the sun. But these are exceptions. The lives of most shadows are filled with gloom and sadness. The shadow of a tree, for instance, though thick and cool in summer, lies all winter long prostrate on the snow, thin, shivering in every gust, reduced to a mere skeleton of its former self. But even its lot, compared with the anxious life of a cloud shadow, is bright and happy. Hurried by the winds across the roughest country, condemned to share the lingering death of the cloud it follows, it pines away under the fierce rays of its enemy, the sun, and dies at last, the victim of worry and exhaustion.

These dependent unfortunates have qualities of form and color that entitle them to consideration for their own sakes; and if we can declare their independence and see them for what they are, we may become conscious of beauties which before we only dimly apprehended. It will be easier to think simply of the shadows themselves, if we begin with some which, at first sight, seem to have a truly independent life.

That these independent shadows are rare is proved by the surprise with which we see them. I was startled not long ago when walking in the fields by the shadow of a large bird suddenly gliding by me from behind. The dark spot swept silently past in a long graceful curve, darkened for an instant the top of an old stone wall, and disappeared behind some bushes. I turned quickly and there, near the sun, but so far above the earth that I could hardly connect him with the shadow, was a large hawk. As I watched him soaring round and round, I wondered how far away by this time his circling shadow was scaring field-mice on some other meadow.

Other flying shadows, more common and therefore not so startling, are those whose wretched lot I have pointed out, — the shadows of drifting clouds. One afternoon this spring when a brisk west wind was blowing the broken masses of a heavy storm-cloud across the sky, from one of the higher hills near Cambridge I watched the race of shadows. One by one or neck and neck in little groups, they slipped along 'cross country as though they were running a gigantic steeple-chase. Silently and swiftly they glided over field and forest, taking the steep slopes with a shrink and a bound and leaping from the crest far out into the valley beyond. The scene was bright and exhilarating, cheerful, full of warmth and color, when, to my dismay, the light suddenly went out all around me, the wind blew bleak and chill on my back, a blot of gloom stretched out rapidly before me, and I realized that the chase had come my way and I had been run down by one of the shadowy coursers.

In much the same way we often find ourselves in the path of a great storm-cloud that runs down in its course wide stretches of country. One of our heavy snow-storms last winter came to us from the West, where it had mobilized its forces on the great plains. It undulated over the Berkshires, leaving a broad white ribbon behind, and slipped easily down their eastern slope. As it approached, its solid level front shut out our sun and stars, and for several days we lay in its shadow. Then the cloud and the shadow beneath passed out to sea, darkening the face of the deep and dropping a vanishing trail. Though we could not follow it, we knew that somewhere on the waters that great shadow was running down sailing ship and ocean liner alike; and in fancy we could see the sun flashing on the gleaming upper surface of the cloud and slanting under its edges, impatient to break through and put the shades to flight.

Although these flying shadows of birds and clouds appear more striking in some ways than the more humbly dependent ones, they are no more beautiful. Nothing can be more exquisitely dainty than the color of a shadow on the gleaming surface of a snow-field; for, on a cloudless day when the snow crystals refract the direct sunlight and throw back to the eye a dazzling white, the shadows are content to reflect the blue of the sky as if in a mirror. Every little shaded depression looks like a cup of cold bluish water.

This tinting, so pale and dainty in midday, deepens towards evening, when the sun is low, into a strong blue. Then every shadow, besides the color stolen from the sky, borrows a still deeper shade from the surrounding complementary yellow which tinges the sunlit surface of the snow. This color scheme of yellow and blue I have never seen more beautiful than on one of those old clearings deep in the woods that one sometimes finds not far from Cambridge. I had followed my own lengthening shadow for some time through wooded country, knee-deep in snow, when suddenly I came to an open field. Then as I stood in the edge of the trees, their shadows lay before me as blue as the sky above and shot through by long spikes of yellow sunlight that slanted between the tree-trunks at my back. Beyond the shadows a wide expanse of creamy snow crumbled thickly over boulders and furrows to a gray stone wall that hemmed in a grove of bright green pines. Running across one corner of the field, a wavering line of little blue shadows was caught in the footprints of a fox which, the night before, had ventured out into the open.

Some of the dependent shadows that I have commiserated, besides beauty of form and color, have a motion so noticeable that they seem endowed with almost as much life and freedom as the shades of flying clouds. The best time to watch these pointer shadows — for they seem to point the time of day — is at the edge of the evening when the sun is falling lower and lower in the sky. Then the shadows of the trees, stretching themselves, begin to creep and creep across the lawn, very slowly at first but faster as they advance, until there comes a moment, especially marked on our western plains, when the lengthening shadow, reaching the horizon, shoots off into space and for one brief moment that tree in the garden helps to form the shadow outline of the outline of the earth. Then the sun sinks lower, and the shadow of another tree, farther west, in turn projects itself through the heavens and eclipses some distant star.

Then night rises out of the east. Gradually the great shadow arches to the zenith, bringing out the brighter stars as it passes; and then descends the western sky, blotting out its light and closing the day just as an eyelid drops over a drowsy eye. This line of shadow, curving with the great curve of the earth itself, is sometimes hard to distinguish; for it is only a somewhat sharper graduation than usual in the infinitely delicate scale of light and shade that extends at sunset from the western to the eastern horizon.

These moving shadows at sunset give us once a day a sense of the vast underlying life of Nature. On a summer evening when the wind has fallen, when the leaves and grasses which rustled in it all day are still, when the clouds hang motionless in the air, when the birds are silent and Nature as we ordinarily think of her has gone to rest, — then we are conscious of the deeper, vaster life of the universe that by day is hidden from us in a kaleidoscope of petty appearances. As the shadows steal across the earth and climb the sky, they indicate visibly the action of those greater processes that go on about us every moment without our heed.

DISSERTATIONS

HEROISM IN 1898

By Frank Wilson Cheney Hersey

A prime function of academic life is the interpretation and criticism of contemporary civilization. Men of a university should by no means sit apart from complex activity in cloisters of judgment, and promulgate platitudes about their fellow-men. On the contrary, they should walk out into the sunshine and storm of actual humanity, should experience the good and the evil of the world as men, and should be the critics, the interpreters, to their times, of the significance of what mankind is doing.

For criticism along these lines, one of the most luminous episodes in our national life of to-day is the Spanish War. In the very fact of the war there is a chance for interpretation to the effect that our conflict was in reality a last fight in the long struggle between the Teutonic and the Romance civilizations; and that under such circumstances it was not only irrepressible, but actually essential to the progress of mankind. Again, the conduct of this war, the management in the care of the army, — precisely what we did not expect in an age of applied science, — offers a field for criticism. Yet neither the war itself, nor the conduct of the war, is in any degree so fruitful in lessons as the moral action of our troops in the field. Here, as in the events of any war, we have the concise expression of the physical and moral heroism of the people. This heroism, writ large where all the world might see it by our soldiers and sailors last summer, is of a quality distinctly worth interpretation.

At the beginning of the war, the troops who were immediately put into the field, who bore the brunt of campaigning and the shock of battle, were, with the exception of three regiments, men of our regular service. It is of these regulars that I shall speak. They had been recruited from the vast army of the unemployed, from those who, under stress of poverty or through reckless zest for adventure, abandon the sordid commonplace of their civil life for the brawny, open-air activity of service on sea and land. Discipline, and the traditions of the service, had made them soldiers of honor and of spirit, but soldiers by trade.

When they marched to the front and fought and bled, in this war ostensibly for the liberation of bleeding Cuba, their hearts glowed neither with philanthropy nor with resentment. For the most part, they went with stolid indifference. Fighting was the regulars' business, "it was all in the day's work;" and when "the order was to stand by the day's work," the regulars showed the machine-like precision in action and the dogged fidelity in temper of their trade. This was not the spirit of the farmers at Lexington or of the volunteers of '61. Patriotic, no doubt, these men of '98 were; but they were not fighting to found for their sons a free and independent nation, or to save that nation from disunion. They were not thrilled with a grand enthusiasm, or with eager devotion to a moral aim. Their temper was that of the professional soldier, —

> "Theirs not to make reply,
> Theirs not to reason why,
> Theirs but to do and die."

Yet another thing made the "morale" of these troops unlike that of the Patriots of 1775 and 1861, — the character of the men. They were, to say the least, irreligious. Many and many of them were immoral in word and deed. Some had proved morally unfit for the struggle of civil existence. All had lived a rough life together, — well disciplined as soldiers, but as men exuberant with all the lusty faults of robustness. These men at Manila and Santiago could sing cheap popular songs the night before they went into action. The men who fought at Bunker Hill thought fit to pray yonder on Cambridge Green the night they set out for war; the men who fought at Gettysburg chanted "America" and the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" on their marches and round their camp-fires. Different, then, in purpose and in character were the men of '98 from those of '75 and '61; and different so profoundly that even if one remembered Napoleon's saying, "the worse the man, the better the soldier," one might yet despair of success to ungodly men in a godly war.

Suddenly these men were in action, the hell-fire action of a tropical battlefield, and now — came the "everlasting miracle"! They fought, bled, died the sharp deaths and the slow, agonizing deaths with never a flinching, never a groan, brave among the world's bravest, and to the last, men of sublime manhood. Dashing through Cuban jungles, surging up the hills of Caney and San Juan, through the red-hot storm of bullet and shell, any soldier of honor would do as much in the ecstasy of mortal combat.

But this was not all. This was the soldiers' trade; they did the work of men. Their character was suddenly luminous with noble humanity. At the same moment that they were vying with one another for posts of danger and hazard of death, — in this reminding us of Sir Walter Raleigh and those doughty English admirals in their rivalry to run their ships up into the hottest place among the Spanish galleons at Cadiz, — at this same moment they showed an unselfish devotion, as tender as that of women, to their comrades in arms. "Five men spring to rescue Lieutenant-Colonel Haskell, desperately wounded in their front, — three are shot down." "Private Henderson goes down to death bearing in his arms his wounded lieutenant." "Young Michie falls dead two minutes after bandaging the wound of his comrade Dunning." And so on, and so on, to the end of that day's battle.

A greater strife, however, was yet to come, the strife with mortal pain in the Valley of the Shadow of Death; and here theirs was the greatest of all victories. During the days and nights of the first, second, and third of July, nearly eight hundred wounded men lay in long rows on the ground at the field-hospital before Santiago, all without food or drink, blankets or pillows, without shelter from the blazing sun or the drenching dews. These soldiers, many of whom had been barbarously carried in jolting army wagons over the rough five miles from the front, were obliged to lie hour after hour in terrible pain waiting their turn for treatment, and after they had been racked with agony on the operating tables were put away upon the ground, weak and helpless, to suffer or to die, — alone. And yet through all this anguish, those men, though they knew there was error and mismanagement somewhere, exhibited magnificent patience, uncomplaining fortitude and self-control. Some of them were in the last extremity of mortal agony, but they made no groan, no murmur. Occasionally a trooper under the surgeon's knife would swear; yet from the interminable rows of wounded on the ground came no sound of weakness. They were suffering, — some were dying, — but they were strong. Not a single soldier asked to be treated out of his regular turn on account of the severity of his wound. They repeatedly gave way to one another, saying: "Take this one first, — he 's shot through the body. I 've only got a smashed foot, and I can wait." Intense pain and the fear of impending death are supposed to bring to light the selfish, human animal. It was not so in the case of these men, who rose from the coarse evil of their lives to their true nobility.

What makes this heroism of theirs so conspicuous is its human quality. Both on the battlefield and in the hospital these men did and endured through the very sufficiency of their manhood. It is as if they said, "We are sheer men; and by virtue of that same fact we can do and bear anything." It is this courage of men as sheer men that is significant. The heroism which grows from a just cause or a firm belief is not so notable. The Christian saints could smile in their martyrdom, — it was for their Christ. The Protestant Reformers could cry at the stake like Bishop Latimer: "Be of good cheer, and play the man; for we shall this day light such a candle by God's grace in England as, I trust, shall never be put out!" — they were dying for freedom of conscience. The ragged and freezing patriots at Valley Forge could hear the Declaration of Independence ringing in their ears. The starving prisoners at Andersonville could hear the voice of Webster, — "Union and Liberty, one and inseparable, now and forever." But the wounded men before Santiago felt no high seriousness, and were supported by no glorious convictions. They were in peril and in pain; their duty as soldiers had brought them there, and being there, "they did their work, and held their peace and had no fear to die." Nothing in the land to-day is sweeter than this courage. Carlyle has preached it with his thunders, Mr. Kipling has lauded it with his trumpets, and Browning has glorified it with his chant:

> "Strive, and hold cheap the strain;
> Learn, nor account the pang; dare, never grudge the throe!"

THE SAINT CROIX BORDER

By Henry Milnor Rideout

With no problem of empire to make clear, and no suggestion to offer toward colonial government, I can only try to turn you for a moment from the stirring Philippine East to a very humble corner of our own New England. The Saint Croix River, between Maine and New Brunswick, — how shall I apologize for it? There are no natives being killed down there. The only cannon ever heard in the valley are those which, with more patriotism than tact, bellow Fourth of July salutes from the wharf at Calais across to the British government building in Saint Stephen. My sole excuse, then, is that in this region lies our easternmost boundary, that borderers are never quite like other folks, and that the people of the Saint Croix are real borderers.

The manner of their becoming so at all is rather curious. In the summer of 1604, Pierre du Gast, le Sieur de Monts, with high-born companions, D'Orville and Champadore, piloted by Champlain himself, entered the waters of Passamaquoddy, and came sailing up, past headland after headland, into the fair river of Etchemins. Here, in a country of noble hills, and red shores, and dark blue waters, they settled on a little island la Sainte Croix; and here they built a stockaded village. But when, with a fall of October snow, winter was upon them, when the wine froze in their bottles and had to be dealt out by weight, and when scurvy killed one after another of these gentlemen-adventurers, the colony lost heart. In the spring when the cakes of ice came floating down in the black water, they loaded their goods into their pinnace, and sailed away to Port Royal. The work of their hands was never established, nor anything beyond the name Saint Croix. The river, slowly wearing the island away, crumbled and carried off all traces of the little burying-ground. As the years went on, with their succession of royal grants and patents, the Saint Croix was continually named as frontier, first between Acadia and New England, afterward between Massachusetts and Nova Scotia. But where the Saint Croix was, no man knew; in a century and a half it had become a lost river. It was only after irritable dealings between England and America, after many surveys, much parley of commissioners, much badgering of the poor Indians, Lewie Neptune and Aeneas Moon, and after long search among dusty records in Paris, that the lost river was found again, and that Webster, in the Ashburton treaty, could fix the Saint Croix as boundary.

But while the identity of the river had faded away, men had pierced far enough to find the stream itself, and to settle among its hills. All these men were pioneers doubly. Those on the western bank had come first from England and then from Massachusetts; they were already inveterate Yankees, turned all the shrewder for this new start in life. They buckled down to business like Calvinists. Those on the further bank were mostly Scotch and English Loyalists, refugees who, in coming from New England and New York, had moved their households for the second time, and who, with their family clocks and candlesticks, transported something of the old leisure and dignity, and a great deal of the Old English spirit. Their new country was one of English valleys; of high, windy ridges; of hills and bays that, but for the gulls flecking them, might be the Scottish highlands. This new land they laid out in the name of the saints —side by side, the parishes of Saint Stephen, Saint Patrick, Saint Andrew, Saint John, of Saint David and Saint George; and along the roads in many of them grows the hawthorn set out by men homesick for the old country. The English Church in Saint Andrews, widely embracing the name of All Saints, still has its gilded Royal Arms, sent over by royalty itself. Royalty, too, though with the bar sinister, is said to have walked the very streets of the town, in the person of a gentleman who held government office and was a son of King George IV. And as for acquaintance with the noble and historic, it was not so long ago that old men, remembering Eastport under British occupation and martial law in 1814, could remember also the British admiral, Sir Thomas Masterman Hardy,—the Hardy who had knelt and kissed the dying Nelson.

What I have just said suggests, I hope, that of the two peoples on the border, the Canadians have the more courtly and memorable past. The Yankees can offer little by way of tradition or relic. From a childhood on the American side, I can recall a few strange figures that gave hint of foregone generations and manners; a real travelling tinker, in the flesh and blood, with a tongue that plied faster than his irons; and a real tavern hostler, trade-fallen to the livery stables, named Tuck,—a name that took one back to outlaws in Lincoln green; an occasional sailor of the old school; and a few people who could remember stories of counterfeiters and smugglers and could sing a version of the famous Two Sisters, and a ballad of the fight between the Constitution and the Guerrière. But these men were never many, nor, I fear, are they any longer there. And though there are, of course, many persons to whom the local history is dear, the great mass of both Yankees and Britishers—the common folk among whom legends are supposed to linger—are indifferent to the past of the border.

On both sides the common folk are alike, too, in making small account of the beautiful country that they hold in common. It moves them not. The hills that rise and stand away on every side—and they are hills to thank God on—are mere dead things, to which few eyes are lifted up, and whence can come little strength. Not given to walking—or indeed to any bodily exercise — most of the borderers lounge through the streets of their dusty towns on the brightest day of the short summer; and when the great rank and file of them do escape to where a glimpse of nature is possible, it is but amid the distractions of the Sunday-school picnic.

This common indifference to a pleasant but a useless past, and to a beautiful but unpractical scenery, — this, and the fact that they are separated only by the river, a line so easily crossed as to be almost imaginary, — might make one think that the two peoples are, after all, indistinguishable. To think so would be a great mistake. They are as different almost as folk of different races; and the greatest wonder is, that as time goes on, they are growing more and more distinct and unlike. An American visitor to the region, crossing the Saint Croix into New Brunswick, would find not only that he must rein his horses to the left, but that many things besides the law of the road are changed. He would hear no more of Admiral Dewey or of Governor Roosevelt, but much talk — in strange accents — of Radicals and Conservatives. Just where any Radicals were (Grits, they called them), he would be at a loss to know; for along the whole Canadian border no one looks or acts the part. They are all slow of speech and movement, heavy and deliberate, with the pleasant, quiet manner of provincials. The boys in the streets, or on the country roads, talk in the droll slang of at least one generation ago. Even the farmers cannot keep pace with the seasons; the Yankee across the river will be picking his apples by the time that the fields in Charlotte County are first dotted with haycocks; and winter comes perilously near to finding the British potatoes still in the ground. British, I say advisedly; for you are never allowed to believe that the district, with all its people and things, is under anything but the direct sway of Her Majesty, the Queen. Certain of her subjects, particularly in Saint Andrews, although their loyalist grandfathers may have come from Connecticut, always speak of England as "Home." As a matter of fact, their connection with the mother country is very roundabout; it is to the colonial cities of Halifax and Saint John that they go to renew their acquaintance with the great British empire.

For the Yankees, however, the journey's end is Boston; and the journey is for pleasure, for sight-seeing of the most wide-awake and modern kind. At home, too, they are just as alert to the present, and make a point of trying to know all that goes on; a laudable desire, indeed, but fulfilled by methods not always so much to their credit. A native of the Scotch Ridge or Saint David's would read his Montreal weekly in dulness and leisure; the natives of Calais prefer the more piquant columns of the Boston Globe and the Boston Post, and of late there has been an increasing number of them who find great relish even in the New York Journal and the pink magazines of the barber shop.

Very different from their British neighbors, — much more different than I can tell you, — the American borderers are quite as far removed from their brother Yankees of New England. Let no one confound them with the men and women made famous by Miss Wilkins. The silent inner life — they would not understand it; there is no hypertrophied conscience inside of them! In the words of Mr. Brandeis, they, like the people along the rest of the Maine coast, are "the Southerners of the North," hospitable, good-natured, and lazy. But their laziness does not extend to wits or speech. If you were to visit them, sharp things would be said about you within the hour after your arrival; things not always agreeable, perhaps, but extremely pat and to the point. Descendants of people who, as we saw, were twice pioneers, they have inherited a shrewdness doubly shrewd: and the clash with a different nation on the border has sharpened their wits still further, and has given them "a tongue with a tang."

It has been said that this gift of words is more than offset by the harm that border life does them, in blunting their moral sense; that the universal habit of smuggling hardens them to lawbreaking and hypocrisy. A pretty theory can be built from this; the only trouble is that it would not be true. I have already admitted that their consciences have not the New England enlargement. But even if their characters were not of the sturdiest, reasons might be found in the fact that many of their young men have to go out to seek fortune in the great world, that factories are bringing in less desirable townspeople, and that there has so long been continued the silly and shameful farce of a prohibitory law. But smuggling is another matter. Both sides of the border have always been such good friends and neighbors — even in the War of 1812 — that to buy things of each other without paying revenue seems to them innocent and praiseworthy. Unless the things are bought to be sold again, they are mere transpontine purchases. To carry across a Wedgwood pitcher, or butter and eggs, or a Bible, is the most simple thing in the world; as natural as it was for the heathen to live in darkness, and still lead a pretty decent sort of life. Or to change the figure, smuggling comes as natural to the natives as the berries to their mountain ash, and the red cockades to their sumac. And so, I make no doubt, it will all remain, as long as our Fourth of July cannon continue to roar at that opposite Custom House over which flies the red ensign of England.
